PREFACE.

In 1822, John Adams, then in his eighty-seventh year, presented the Town of Quincy, Massachusetts, with (to use the wording of the deed): "the fragments of my Library, which still remain in my possession, excepting a few that I shall reserve for my consolation in the few days that remain to me." Upon this gift he imposed several conditions, the first being that a catalogue of the books be made and printed. This catalogue was prepared and issued under the title: "Deeds and other documents relating to the several pieces of land, and to the Library presented to the town of Quincy by President Adams, together with a catalogue of the books" (Cambridge, 1823). As a present means of reference this catalogue is wholly useless, since the titles are arranged neither alphabetically under the author's names nor under the subject of which they treat, but according to the languages in which the books are printed, and to some extent according to the sizes of volumes.

Another condition of deed was that "none of the books shall ever be sold, exchanged or lent, or suffered to be removed from the apartment, without a solemn vote of a majority of the superintendents." Unfortunately this condition has not been complied with, for a comparison of this first catalogue with the present will show that some volumes are missing. One loss in particular, Thomas Morton's New English Canaan, is a severe one. For this rare volume there has been substituted a copy of the late Charles Francis Adams, Jr.'s edition of Morton's book made for the Prince Society. Besides the books lost or stolen, many have been mutilated, in part by hard usage from frequent removals, rot, and lack of proper care, but mostly at the hands of autograph collectors, who, in many cases, have not hesitated to cut or tear the top or even the middle of title-pages.

It was the wish of John Adams that the Library should be placed in "an apartment of the building to be hereafter erected for a Greek or Latin School or Academy," and a provision for this academy was made in another deed. After a number of transfers from one place to another, this Library was placed, in 1882, in the Thomas Crane Public Library of Quincy. In 1883 an orderly arrangement and suitable card catalogue were begun under the direction of the late Charles Francis Adams, Jr., and finished in October, 1884.

The Library remained in the custody of the Thomas Crane Library for nearly ten years, but was practically unused for it was of a character little calculated to interest readers in a small community. Recognizing that works of this sort could only be made serviceable when used in connection with the resources of a large assemblage of literature, inviting to scholars and students, the Supervisors of the Adams Temple and School Fund of Quincy voted, November 29, 1893, to transfer the Adams Collection to the Boston Public Library. On December 6, 1893, the Trustees of the Boston Public Library voted to accept this transfer. The collection now stands in the annex to the Children's Room. It has been catalogued in accordance with the system in use in the general library, and the cards have been incorporated into the Public and Official Catalogues. Since it is now a working part of the Boston Public Library and since its contents are made available through the general catalogue, it has not seemed necessary in the construction of the present catalogue to do more than to give the titles under the author's names.

The value of the Library of John Adams is in part a sentimental one. He was one of the United States Commissioners to France, and Minister to Holland, during the American Revolution, and while in Paris and at The Hague collected many of the volumes of which he made use in writing his "Defence of the Constitutions of Government of the United States." Years later he was the second President of the nation. From the time when he was a student in Harvard College until the day of his death on the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1826, he drew books about him. As a result his Library is an admirable specimen of the intellectual tastes of an American gentleman of the Eighteenth Century. Not only does it contain many of the Greek, Latin, French and English classics, but a considerable number of works on law, commerce, and agriculture. The books, however, on the constitutional and political history of various countries, among them a number of histories of the Italian republics, give a special significance to the collection. With the exception of the Library of Col. William Byrd of Virginia, which contained 3438 volumes, it is possibly the largest private collection of books of its day made in this country.

Among other valuable and interesting works may be especially designated Henri Estienne's edition of Plato's Works in three folio volumes (Paris, 1578) enriched by the autographs of John and John Quincy Adams; Winslow's Good news from New England (1624); John Marshall's Life of Washington, each of the five volumes containing an autograph presentation from the author to John Adams; and Joseph Warren's Massacre oration of 1772, an autographed presentation copy.

Three of the volumes once belonged to the Rev. Thomas Prince, and two of them contain the book-plate of the Old South Library. In the Boston Patriot of October 23, 1811, John Adams wrote: "I mounted up to the balcony of Dr. Sewall's church, where was assembled a collection which Mr. Prince had devoted himself to make from the twentieth year of his age . . . Such a treasure never existed anywhere else, and can never again be made." It seems probable that in one or more of his visits to this balcony Mr. Adams borrowed these volumes and failed to return them.

Among the numerous autographs are those of James Otis, Elbridge Gerry, T. Brand Hollis, Dr. Benjamin Rush; as well as manuscript notes by Thomas Prince in Oldmixon's British Empire in America, and Winslow's Good news from New England, and numerous annotations by John Adams in Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin's French Revolution, Davila's Histoire des guerres civiles, and Rousseau's Discourse upon inequality.

Many volumes contain the book-plates of John Adams, John Quincy Adams, and Charles Francis Adams, the Elder. These book-plates of the son and grandson of John Adams are evidence that they, and doubtless later members of the Adams family, added to the collection as it originally stood in 1823. At that time the number of volumes was 2756. In 1883, the number was 2804, and at present in 1917, the total enumeration is 3019.

This catalogue has been edited and put through the press, and the preface written, by Lindsay Swift, Editor of Publications.
